CONVERTING A MOLE-HILL INTO A MOUNTAIN.

The speech of Ex-President Davis recently delivered at Montgomery, White Sulphur Springs, has been extensively criticised at the North. The criticisms have not been just or reasonable, and furnish strong evidence that the North has not yet forgiven Mr. Davis, but even "taints" towards him feelings of intense bitterness and hatred. The denunciations which the Northern papers are now publishing against him are calculated to arouse the sympathy of the South.

Mr. Davis' speech has been the theme of much wide-spread criticism, we re-publish by request his remarks in full, from which it will be seen that he uttered no sentiment of disloyalty to the National Government.

Mr. Davis' speech may have been ill-timed, and if he had pursued a different strain, his sentiments, if they had not received general endorsement, would have at least escaped misrepresentation and harsh criticism. Whenever he opens his lips, he is sure to say something that will be caught up at the North and construed to the prejudice of the South. If any other Southern man than himself had uttered the sentiments below, it would have been all right, and not a word of complaint would the papers that are now abusing him have perused.

The following are the remarks which have produced quite a political ferment at the North:

"Mr. Davis said he deeply felt this kind welcome. He always felt at home in Virginia, and what Confederate did not? She gave her bosom to be racked by all the horrors of war and freely shed her best blood. She was now lifting her head from its effects, and he was glad to see her green fields and pastures, her fertile valleys and picturesque mountains, which here, like no where else, were clothed from base to summit. All were beautiful; yet there was here something above them all. Her men excelled her soil, and her noble women excelled even the men. Well did he remember when the tide of war swept away the men into the army and scattered the negroes, how—when the barns and houses, mills and all save the fences which were only spared the destroying flame because they were of stone—how the women of the Shenandoah Valley, whose hands had never known an hour's toil in the field, had made crops, and whenever the Confederate army came along, they were ready-made Confederates; flags, and were always happy to aid the cause and feed Confederate soldiers. Too long had we delayed the vindication of our cause. Many of the actors had been called home to their fathers; yet perhaps the delay had not been altogether unfortunate, for those who felt most deeply found it hard to uncover their whole heart. The present was brighter now, and 'truth crushed to earth would rise again.' We had been more cheated than conquered by the declarations of the Federal President, Congress and Generals. Would there have been a surrender if we had expected what has followed? We were told the war was merely carried on to maintain the Union. Had we foreseen the result, we would to-day have been free. He referred to the objects of the Association, and said there were now scattered scraps of history that should be collected to perpetuate the deeds of our fallen soldiers and vindicate the action of our country; that great care should be taken with the collection of every scrap, as mankind was deeply interested in the constitutional cause that was to the war.

He referred to the commercial rights of the South and how they had suffered, and the decadence of both commerce and liberty. In referring to the moral and religious causes, and the idea that because we did not succeed we were necessarily wrong he said that in a cause like ours the great Creator must have looked down with an approving smile; that we do not always see the workings for good in the way of the world. That our chastisement might be designed to lead to the triumph of the principles for which we struggled. He had received a letter from a gentleman in Massachusetts, which said that mankind owed a debt of gratitude to the Southern people for their efforts in behalf of that constitutional liberty which men were so rapidly forgetting; that our story had only been half told, would we then be condemned before the world? No, no! These facts must be got together. It was due to the unrecorded dead, who had fought for truth and died in a patriotic cause. While this organization cannot write the history of this war, yet it could collect the material from which future historians might obtain the facts.

Would not our enemies, or in the phrase of the day, our Northern brethren, make up at least and take the hand of oppression from off our Southern daughters, or are we in that decadence of all that is honored, to be brought to the condition of which the Irish poet sang:

"Unhonored thy sons, till they have learned to betray;
Undistinguished they live, if they shame not their dead;
And the torch that will light them to dignity's way,
Must be caught at the pile where their country expires."

It thus we must seek the road to preferment, who would not live a life of obscurity in preference? He had a hope in the future founded on the fact that he had never seen a reconstructed Southern woman, and while the men of the present day might yield the principles for which they struggled, yet he hoped the children who succeeded them would grow up to maintain and perpetuate them and redeem all that we had lost."

The Lexington Cavalier, referring to the Hill-Browlow controversy, says that Browlow "has made nothing by the venture but great notoriety, and the fact that he has succeeded in getting another gentleman to notice him."

THE JOURNAL OF COMMERCE ON MR. DAVIS' SPEECH.

The following extract from the New York Journal of Commerce is the calumny criticism from the North we have yet seen on the speech of Mr. Davis before the Southern Historical Society.

The Journal of Commerce has on many occasions shown its sympathy towards the South, and we believe its feelings for our people are those of kindness, and not of malice.

That paper very strongly endorses the purposes and aims of the Southern Historical Society, and adds:

"Unless the Southern Historical Society, or some such body, supplies the history of the 'future historian' will be, in one respect, no better qualified to do justice to his great subject than is the historian of our day. The muse of history is passionless, calm, seeking only after the truth; and the proceedings of historical societies appear at the best when they are free from all personal or political feelings. We regret that the appropriate tranquility of the Southern Historical Convention should have been broken in upon by the rash and imprudent utterances of Mr. Jefferson Davis. They jar most disagreeably upon our sense of what was fitting to the time and place. Mr. Davis knows, or should know, much about the war, in which he was a leading spirit. He could give the Southern Historical Society facts and figures that would be worth having. He could correct some misapprehensions which now exist in Northern and Southern minds with regard to important occurrences of the war. But when Mr. Davis gets up he launches at once into a speech glorifying secession, declaring that 'we had been cheated rather than conquerors,' and that 'the men of this day may yield the principles for which they contended, but the children who succeed will cherish and perpetuate them.' To the women of the South he addressed himself with much tact, paying beautiful compliments to the 'decoration and self-sacrifice,' saying that he had never seen a Southern woman who had been reconstructed, and committing to the faithful and devoted sex his 'greatest hope for the future of our country.' All that he says of the fortitude, the patience, the self-sacrifice, and the unswerving fidelity of the Southern women is perfectly true—as it is true of women in the wars of all lands and ages. The tribute was deserved. But taking it in connection with all else that Mr. Davis said in his exaltation of the past or in his hopes for the future, we see that the aim of his speech was to make his hearers as discontented and bitter as he himself. We acquire him of any allusion to trying to foment another civil war, though some Northern Radical journals will probably put that foolish charge on his words, but, reverting to his speech, in its effect, it was out of place and mischievous.

It has been asserted that Mr. Davis has no measurable influence at the South. At all events, we do not believe that he represents the feelings of those southerners upon whom the fortunes of their country actually depend; the men who can forget as well as forgive; who do not childishly mourn over the past, but work in the present for the future with a courage that will not let them despair. These are the men who, while Mr. Davis and a few others are uselessly lamenting over the lost cause, are trying hard to save the South from carpet-baggers and decay. With their co-workers—the Conservative men of all parties at the North—they will yet disappoint the lugubrious expectations of Mr. Jefferson Davis, and show him a union regenerated and disenthralled."

The Wilmington Star has an excellent editorial on the attacks on Mr. Davis. While granting his speech was impolitic, the Star denies that there was treason in it. The Star adds:

"Perhaps his utterances of a public nature had better be forgotten—rather because he belongs to the past and cannot be part of the present, than because he is irreconcilably hostile to the success of the country under the existing political dispensation. The heart of Jefferson Davis, that heart which has suffered so much for the people of the South, is not a heart full of greed and hatred. If there was a touch of selfishness in some of his allusions his great feelings, his isolation from public affairs and to a large extent from public interest, should be sufficient excuse. At least the people who caused his woe could forbear to strike him now he is down, and mutters out a feeble note of defiance. If he be powerless for harm he should be exempt from abuse."

The Star "regrets recriminations coming from any quarter, but when the historic representative of a whole section is maligned, the people of that section ought not to be censured for coming to his defence."

The Baltimore Gazette says that "a civil suit brought by a widow to recover damages from the alleged murderer of her husband is something new;" and then gives an account of such a case in Kentucky, where Mary Ellen Burns has entered suit against a wealthy citizen, one Benjamin Osborne, for killing her husband, laying her damages at ten thousand dollars.

Our contemporary is mistaken as to the novelty of such suits. We remember a similar case in this State years ago, from Nash county, in which eminent counsel in this city were employed.

Speaking of the Southern Historical Society recently in session, Gen. Hill, of the Southern Home, who was formerly one of its Vice Presidents, says "that the last two meetings have been held in Virginia at a fashionable watering-place, to which poor rebels can afford to go. Virginia has quite an array of historians in the field, and if she capture the Historical Society also, she will have her full share of war laurels."

The rumor that the German Government had made overtures for the purchase of Lower California turns out to be a canard.

The Southern Home, in view of the murder of little Willie Carter in Wilmington, and the horrible mutilation of his body by some negro boys in that city, suggests "some painful thoughts in regard to the future of the negro race." The Home says the uniform testimony of farmers is that negro boys and young men are as a general rule vicious and idle. Their depravity, the Home thinks, does not rest at our door.

The proposition to have a grand musical festival sometime during the Fair week for the benefit of Oxford Orphan Asylum, separate and distinct from the gift concert, is an excellent one. Such a proposition will enlist the sympathy and support of the churches and the church choirs, and can not be reasonably objected to by any one.

STEAM, WATER, HORSE AND HAND POWER PRESSES.

Farmville, Pitt county, has a Temperance Council.

There is a tremendous freshet up the Cape Fear now.

There were 341 carts in the Wilmington market last week.

Only two marriage licenses in New Hanover county last year.

Col. W. A. Allen, Senator from Dupont county, is still very ill.

The boys who murdered young Carver are to be photographed.

Colored burglars are rampant in Mount Olive, Wayne county.

The Carolina Central Railway is being rapidly pushed to Wadesboro.

There is said to be a good deal of sickness in the Fayetteville section.

The post has taken hold of the cotton in certain sections of Mecklenburg county.

Since the 22d of March thirty-two marriages occurred in the Wadesboro section.

The house of Mr. Cason Cartjohn's, Wilmington, was robbed on Friday night of a number of articles.

A man in Goldsboro has put 2,486 pounds on a postal card. The writing can easily be read with the naked eye.

The store of Mr. Thomas Green, on Middle street, Newbern, was entered by burglars on Friday night and robbed of many articles.

Billy Myers, a Wilmington wife scater, was hauled up before a magistrate on Saturday and bound over in a bond of $100.

The masquerade ball on Thursday night at the Atlantic House, Beaufort, was a very gay affair. A large number were present in masque.

The Methodists have a new church at the old Caldwell place, Gaston county, and the Baptist are erecting one at Locust and Tuckasee.

We learn that the people of Caldwell will vote on the question of subscribing $100,000 to the Chester and Lenoir Narrow Gauge Railroad, on the last Thursday in September, and that there is no doubt about a favorable result.

Sherrif Robeson, of Lincoln, brought a Newbern last week one Calvin Finck, charged with having attempted to commit a rape on the person of a white woman in Catawba county. Finck was put in jail, but afterwards released on bail.

Says the Western Vindicator: "Two miles east of this place on Bank Bottom's land is the ore bank from which was taken the first iron ore ever used in the State. The first forge was at Horse Ford creek two miles from Hickory. Under a grant from the king, for every twenty tons made, the possessor of iron received three thousand acres of land after securing a grant for one tract of three thousand acres the proprietor abandoned the work."

Mental Projection.

A number of mysterious manifestations are traceable to the simple fact of the power of impressions altogether dependent on the will. There are many which are purely volitional, and constitute a distinct class of hallucinatory phenomena. They are induced by what I should call the faculty of projection of objects that have been received from without by the brain, and fixed in it. We exercise this faculty naturally, when at will we reproduce to ourselves or project what we have seen, heard, felt, or otherwise received by the senses. We recall a landscape we have surveyed, a tune we have heard, and the like, and if the impression is currently fixed in us, and we will it to return, it comes back correctly. In the act we project from us that which we recall, and look at it or listen to it as if it were again external to us.

This faculty, excited to an unnatural degree, is a fruitful source of illusion. Wigan supplies a striking illustration of the kind in the case of an eminent portrait painter who followed Sir Joshua Reynolds. The painter in question produced three hundred portraits from his own hand in one year. When asked on what this peculiar power of rapid work depended, he answered that when a sitter came to him he looked at him attentively for half an hour, sketching from time to time on the canvass; then he put away the canvass and took another sitter. When he wished to resume the first portrait, he said, "I took the man and put him in the chair, where I saw him as distinctly as if he had been before me in his own proper person. When I looked at the chair, the man was there."

After a while the painter began to feel to discover the difference between the real and the imaginary sitters, so that he became actually insane and remained in an asylum for thirty years. Then his mind was restored to him, and he resumed the use of the pencil; but the evil habit threatened to return, and he once more forsook his art, soon after to die. Talma, the actor, had a faculty of mental projection equally singular with that possessed by the artist whose history Wigan has related. Talma could project before himself the form of a human skeleton with such perfect detail that he had the form was a reality, and when he stood before the foot-lights he had in his presence in the theatre an audience of skeletons.—Popular Science Review.

Alexander Brodgen, a member of the British Parliament, is coming to Virginia on a tour of inspection. Mr. Brodgen is a man of immense capital, owing collieries and iron works. Mr. St. Andrew, of the Farmville Commonwealth and Chase City Virginian, is making preparations for his reception and entertainment by the English colonists at those points.

SINGULAR COINCIDENCE.

A singular coincidence in the deaths of two persons happened Saturday, at a house on the south side of Wilkes street, near the Orange and Alexandria machine shops. A Mrs. Perrin, wife of one of the street car drivers, had been sick for some time. About two weeks ago a woman arrived there hailing from Baltimore, and after some conversation with the sick woman, took a room on the opposite side of the passage from that occupied by Mrs. Perrin, and assisted in nursing her. No one in the house knew the woman nor her antecedents. Mrs. Perrin called her "Hannah," but no one remembers to have ever heard her christian name. Yesterday Mrs. Perrin died. "Hannah," had been complaining for some days, but refused to allow the physician to be called. On the morning of yesterday the little son of Mrs. Perrin finding his mother growing worse, went to the physician. Upon his return he found both his mother and "Hannah" dead. "Hannah" was buried by the corporation. She was a woman about 35 years of age.—African (Va.) Gazette.

GENERAL ANDREW JACKSON'S FIRST AND LAST MARRIAGE.

It is not generally known that among the many other interesting incidents in the life of President Andrew Jackson he was twice married to the same woman, a former Mrs. Rachel Roberts, daughter of a former Mrs. Donelson, the widow of Colonel John Donelson, an emigrant from Virginia to Tennessee. On account of the dissolute habits of her husband, Captain Roberts, application was made to the Legislature of Virginia for a divorce, and soon after intelligence was received that the petition had been granted. Supposing that she was freed from the marital relations, Mrs. Roberts and General Jackson were married in Nashville in 1791. In December, 1793, it was ascertained that the proceeding in the Virginia Legislature was simply an authorization for a suit for divorce to be entered in a Kentucky court, and this suit had just been brought to a successful issue. Much chagrined, but determined to be honorable and correct, Jackson, on his return to Nashville in January, 1794, took out a license, and was again married.

Amsterdam, New York, is somewhat excited over the death of Mrs. Melvina H. Freeman, a prominent married lady, by an abortion produced by her family physician.

Joseph P. Police, a poor machinist of Atlanta, Ga., by the death of abjector in Charleston, S. C., fell heir to $52,000 worth of property and $1,000 in gold.

A late novelty in feminine dress is a ribbon two inches wide crossed on the back like a gentleman's suspenders and having the ends cut short and hanging.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 27, 1873.

(From the Sunday Journal, UNTO DEATH.)

Oh, I live upon the twilight
 Fun and merriment,
 When the sun's rays are fading,
 And the moon is shining;
 And I hear the voices of the dead,
 And I feel the presence of the dead,
 And I know that I am not alone,
 And I know that I am not alone.

And I live upon the twilight
 Fun and merriment,
 When the sun's rays are fading,
 And the moon is shining;
 And I hear the voices of the dead,
 And I feel the presence of the dead,
 And I know that I am not alone,
 And I know that I am not alone.

It may be a illusion,
 A myth, a fancy,
 But it keeps my heart from breaking,
 And my life from fading,
 And as long as I shall linger,
 Comes the echo of each breath,
 "I will love thee, love, forever,
 You may trust me unto death."

A Romantic Story.

Berton's Rock is the great curiosity at Mount Mansfield. It weighs over a hundred tons, and fell from the cliffs above. As we came up yesterday morning, we saw an old lady gazing at it very intently, and one of our wagon-load had the impudence to ask her what she thought of it. "Driver," she demanded, "who is that?" "Why," said he, "she is an old lady that stays about here always. You know how that rock came there, don't you?" Of course we didn't, and said so. "Well," said the driver, "the story is that this hag, which you now see, came up here thirty years ago with a party of gay friends, on a rough and tumble climb of Mount Mansfield. The party camped out on the top of the mountain. One day a young fellow, named Berton, of the party, went off for a stroll, and was seen in the afternoon standing in the ravine waving his hat. This hag then a young lady, and engaged to Berton, of course, wanted a good sight of her lover. So she crept to the very edge of a shelving rock and leaned over to salute him. Immediately the rock began to loosen, and the young lady had just time to get off, when it fell. Of course it fell upon Berton, and there he lays now under that stone; and to cut the story short, this old woman comes here every summer, and we often see her as we saw her just now. She is crazy, and her friends can't prevent her doing as she likes. The most they can do is to hire some one to watch her—and there's the fellow right there now. 'Holla, Jim; how's the old woman?' 'Falling, sir, falling. She don't eat no corn; poor thing; poor thing.'—Cor. N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.
